

I would be greatly disappointed if I was not able to get the traffic and weather service provided by my satellite radio. When traveling through these cities I can never find a station during the times that they are broadcasting traffic. I probably actually create a hazard on the road by continually reaching to the radio to search for local stations to get this information. The broadcast is clear and I don't fade due to fringe areas.

I would hope that competition stays in this regard and that progress continues to go forward instead of back. I would not pay for these services if I didn't find them useful. Let the companies fail on their own by not providing the services that consumers require instead of trying to cut off good quality service.

Sincerely,

Al Martinez
